

Research & Development Credits & Incentives

Does your company design, develop, or improve products, processes, techniques, or software?

Have you designed a new facility or process?

Through the research and development credit, the federal and many state governments are providing subsidies for investment in developing a new or improved product or process. This subsidy can come from both refunds of prior taxes paid and through the reduction of current tax expense. Over the years, the credit has expanded significantly due to pro-taxpayer court rulings and general tax credit changes and now may benefit companies who found little benefit in the past.

Whether you're a high-technology company, software developer, consumer or industrial product manufacturer, many companies similar to yours are taking advantage of the R&D credit. GBQ's tax professionals can help you capitalize on this opportunity.
